New director

Hatch named as women's studies head

By DEBRA WILHELM
Staff Writer

Holly Hatch, a teacher in women's studies at IPFW since 1983, recently began her new role as director of the women's studies program.

Holly Hatch

Hatch's education and training is based primarily in the area of art. As a returning adult student, Hatch received her degree from IPFW. She has also worked in commercial art for advertising agencies.

Hatch currently teaches some of the women's studies classes and said that she is waiting for a textbook which would include ideas, theories and research by women as well as men.

"In the last ten years, there has been a major push to use all-inclusive textbooks," commented Hatch. "It is difficult to find integrated textbooks."

The program is an interdisciplinary arts and sciences project in which students, both male and female, may pursue a minor or an individualized major.

Hatch feels that women's studies is basically "redefining all of the disciplines, no matter what area, in a perspective that is feminist in nature and all-inclusive of the female perspective as well as male."

Hatch notes that the program uses an entirely new vocabulary and humanistic approach to teaching and that there are specific goals. Some of these include analyzing academic disciplines from a feminist perspective, promoting an individual approach to learning, and disseminating knowledge of the diversity of problems faced by women.

Women's studies classes are taught differently from most other classes. "There is a little bit more relaxed atmosphere, and each of the student's independent opinions are welcomed and encouraged."

Hatch thinks that anyone who is an educator should incorporate women's studies' goals into what they teach.

There is a measurable amount of personal feedback and growth involved throughout each semester.

The women's studies department always tries to work closely with other departments to complete special projects.

"Right now we don't have an open Women's Center. We are in the process of job searching for a director."

The center will provide support to women and returning students. The center will have a counselor available for students who may have specific problems, ideas, or even to reassess what they want to do with their lives.

Hatch states, "We are not powerless as students. We have a right to express opinions and to get help for our problems." Hatch hopes the center will be open in a month.

Hatch feels that we need to re-educate ourselves. "We need to push consciousness raising. It is an ongoing process to heighten everyone's awareness. The prevalent attitude is that women are second rate citizens, and we are oblivious to it."

She also feels that we must start a re-education process at a very young age, not at the college level. "Children need to grow up knowing that anyone can do anything. They need to know all the opportunities that are available to them."

Hatch will provide any academic counseling that is required and said, "If a student really does not know what they want to do, maybe it's time to come in and reassess, either through the women's studies or counseling."

ISO Faculty Lecture

Seiler discusses East and West Germany

By BETH JAQUISH
Staff Writer

Last Monday, Dr. Christiane Seiler, professor of IPFW's modern foreign language department, gave a lecture to the International Students Organization about East Germany. Approximately 10 students, faculty and staff attended. Seiler spoke about humanity rather than politics.

During the past two summers, Seiler has attended a four-week seminar in Erfurt, East Germany, for people from Western countries who have studied German.

Under pressure

Daniel Williams, an IPFW sophomore, has his blood pressure taken prior to giving blood last Tuesday. The blood drive, sponsored by the Clerical and Service Staff Advisory Committee, took place from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in Walb Memorial Union Room G21 (photo by Tim Weinert).

Seiler said that most of the East Germans she met were very bright, but were "extremely naive." Although some were judgmental and biased against Western capitalism, she said, "You find unfriendliness in East Germany as much last in West Germany," and that in East Germany, "people grow up fairly normal."

She also explained that East Germany has a very good school system. Academics are combined with practical job skills in factories, stores and businesses. This enables students to be prepared for "experience in the real world."

All students must learn Russian, and many grow up with a knowledge of literature and culture. She indicated this might be because writers and artists are considered to be highly privileged people.

Seiler noted that most of the universities are overcrowded.

Seiler said that East Germany is very much like West Germany was right after World War II. However, many things have been rebuilt.

She says there is very little crime, and that one feels safe in East Germany. She claimed that almost all people have a job, housing and food, but there is little choice of which job or where one lives.

Dr. Seiler feels that, overall, East Germany has "its good and bad sides."

Student lounge space will be redivided soon

By KAYLENE PENA
News Editor

The second floor of Walb Student Union houses the student organization lounge. The room is currently used for the use of various campus student organizations to maintain an office.

Unfortunately, the offices are not a flurry of activity.

Marie Leger, student senate appropriations chair, is working to change that.

"There are groups in there now that never use the lounge," stated Leger. "The Greeks are using the lounge the most."

A committee has been formed to make decisions about the use of the lounge. The committee will develop usage policies and determine which groups may use the room.

"We would like to see only the special interest groups get the space instead of groups that are sponsored by individual departments."

The committee will be sending a memo out to groups. "If they want a space, they'll have to explain to us why they should get it," said Leger.

The division-of-space issue should be settled in three weeks. In January, the committee plans to review the situation.

New furniture has been purchased and is waiting in storage for the committee's decision.

"There is only enough space for six offices," added Leger. "A small space will be kept as a place to eat for the Greeks and everybody."

Student Senate grants funds for Arts Group

By HIM SARBER
Staff Writer

On Monday, Oct. 24, the student senate appropriated $200 to Arts Group for a program scheduled for Feb. 9, 1990. An afternoon program—free to students, staff and faculty—will feature historical literary films presented by Ann Arbor, Mich., film archivist Arthur Stephan. There will be a 7 p.m. presentation of historical films on music and musicians co-sponsored by the Northern Indiana Music Teachers Association and Arts Group. There will be a charge for admission to the evening program.

Gift committee meets

By KAYLENE PENA
News Editor

One man and one letter have sparked the interest of students and staff for the donation of a 25th anniversary gift to IPFW from the 1989-90 student body.

Scott Kellenberger, freshman, wrote a Letter to the Editor proposing the idea of a gift. "I got so much positive response from the editorial," stated Kellenberger. "I wrote the proposal afterwards, and that was well-received by the administration. I was strongly encouraged to form a committee."

"I went to the 25th anniversary committee and they didn't want to do it," added Kellenberger. "I went to Marian Adair, and she suggested several groups and recommended I talk to them to recruit committee members."

The committee met for the first time on Friday, Oct. 27. Brainstorming and troubleshooting was the focus of the first meeting.

A contest will be held for determining what the gift will be. Kellenberger noted, "There will be certain restrictions, but we want to stimulate creativity and participation."

The contest will run from Nov. 22 through Jan. 12. The winners will be awarded cash prizes. The money for the prizes was appropriated from the Students' Government funds.

Campus air waves

Radio station would benefit IPFW students

The possibility of starting an IPFW radio station came up at the last student senate meeting. This idea of a student-run radio station, right here at IPFW, is a wonderful idea for many reasons. The most important is the style of music that would be played. That is, if this station follows the national standard for college radio and plays alternatives to heavy metal and top 40.

This station could offer a world of opportunity to Radio/TV majors and others interested in gaining practical experience in the field of radio. Theoretically, everything from program directing, to disc jockeying to advertising would be under student control and would meet a wide range of student interests.

It could reach as many students as The Communicator. Students, as well as others in the community, need only come to campus to listen. This could make news items and campus announcements more effective.

All of these are reasons enough to start such a station, but the most important reason is the style of music that would be offered.

In the last decade alone, many new and interesting things have been happening in music. Unfortunately, Fort Wayne has been left in the '60s and '70s. All the local commercial stations offer is Top 40 music of past and present, and heavy metal.

Many new artists get air time on college radio or big city stations. Fort Wayne fits neither category. Therefore, those interested in music with more depth are forced to dig through stacks of records hoping to find good, new music, or to take a chance and buy an album that many haven't heard much about. These risks are exciting and sometimes successful, but they also require an endless money supply.

A radio station at IPFW could offer students a new perspective on the music scene. Some artists from other cities may eventually come to Fort Wayne to do a concert.

If the station becomes an actuality, IPFW students will have a chance to hear—and participate in—good music.

This proposed radio station would be less accessible than Channel 23, and exclusively for the IPFW population. This is not the case with Channel 23.

Public apathy makes drug problem worse

Last week was "National Red Ribbon Week, an anti-drug campaign established by the United States Congress. The most visible symbol of the campaign was the wearing of a red ribbon as a symbol of "saying no." These ribbons were handed out by local organizations. Activities like parades and drug education seminars were held by schools and community groups around the country.

The anti-drug push by Congress and by President George Bush has drawn much attention in recent months. Hopefully, the greater awareness of Americans will help to slow the ever-increasing plight of our nation.

There is a very apparently free of problems such as illegal drug use. For some people the use is a way of life. For others, drug use is a way to relax or have fun. The first type is the addict, and the second is the recreational user. Both of these groups contribute equally to the drug problem.

President Bush said, "Who is responsible for the drug problem? Let me tell you straight out. Everyone who uses drugs. Everyone who sells drugs. And everyone who looks the other way." Even if you smoke a couple joints per week or snort cocaine only on special occasions, your money goes to the same dealer that supplies every other drug user.

Drug dealers don't select who they deal to. Every year 200,000 babies will be born to mothers who use drugs during pregnancy. These infants suffer low birth weight, severe mental and physical handicaps, and many show signs of drug dependency at birth. These infants are born prematurely and often die before they have a chance at life.

If these children survive, we will have a generation of individuals with very low mental capacities. The casual drug user, the addict and the people who look away are all partially to blame for this large number of handicapped children.

Pushers don't mind dealing to children and because of the present legal poll, 50 percent of 13 to 17-year-olds agreed that the biggest problem facing people their age is drugs. Of those polled, 40 percent said that drug use and selling are widespread practices at their schools.

The casual drug user, the addict and the people who look away are all helping to give the cell drugs to children and teenagers. The same pusher selling drugs to a college student may use the profit from the sale to buy drugs to sell to the student's junior high sibling.

This proposed radio station would be less accessible than Channel 23, and exclusively for the IPFW population. This is not the case with Channel 23.

Writer opposes activities at NOW convention

To the Editor:

In regard to The Communicator's endorsement of the NOW rally in D.C. on Nov. 12, I thought you might like to know a little about what NOW endorses. Yes, you will be representing the right to have an abortion, but did you know what else was represented there at the last NOW convention?

At the Cincinnati convention, you would have been confronted with the handing out of "The Socialist" and Mao Tse Tung's "Little Red Book," both Communist literature. Also, you might have run across a booth about healing. "By what means of healing?" you might ask—medication? prayers? No, by no other means than witchcraft.

"Also, you might have run across a booth about healing. "By what means of healing?" you might ask—medication? prayers? No, by no other means than witchcraft."

Also, you might have picked up one of the many buttons floating around, such as "How dare you assume I'm heterosexual," or "Mother Nature is a Lesbian." Gay rights were beautifully upheld as part of the NOW cause.

Please be aware of all you are sponsoring if you head for D.C. with the NOW movement. For those protests concerned with the deterioration of fundamental ideology by such organizations mentioned, please represent yourselves in D.C. on Nov. 13-18, with the focus on prayer and repentance of America. For further information on the rally, contact Intervarsity Christian Fellowship.

Editor's Note: The Communicator has not endorsed the NOW movement by running a news item on the upcoming rally.

Student organization hosts forum

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the Intervarsity Christian Fellowship for the forum that they hosted on one of the most prominent issues facing society today, abortion. As future leaders in tomorrow's world, it is important for college students to know the issues that will be facing them in the next decade.

The meeting allowed both sides of the issue to speak, and I thought it worked out very well. In fact, I was glad to hear both sides of the story for once. It would be nice if Intervarsity Christian Fellowship would hold similar meetings in the future on issues such as drug abuse, pornography, and evolution versus creation.

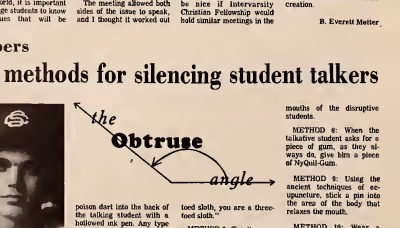
Classroom yappers

List provides methods for silencing student talkers

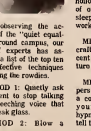


By JAMES WALKER
Managing Editor

In high school, teachers like to limit the amount of talking that goes on during class. The teacher often stops class to yell at disruptive students and maybe send them down to the office. There is no principal at IPFW, and even if there was, the professors wouldn't send many students down to the office.

The professors don't really worry too much about people talking in class. A professor might glance for a moment at those carrying a conversation in the midst of a discussion, but that is about it. A prof will rarely stop to yell at rowdy students. The responsibility of peace and quiet is left to the more serious members of the class.

The professors don't really worry too much about people talking in class. A professor might glance for a moment at those carrying a conversation in the midst of a discussion, but that is about it. A prof will rarely stop to yell at rowdy students. The responsibility of peace and quiet is left to the more serious members of the class.



After observing the activities of the "quiet talkers" around campus, our panel of experts has assembled a list of the top ten most effective techniques for hushing the rowdies.

METHOD 1: Quietly ask the student to stop talking in a screeching voice that could break glass.

METHOD 2: Blow a poison dart into the back of the talking student with a hollowed ink pen. Any type of over-the-counter instant sleep-inducing liquid will work.

METHOD 3: Use witchcraft skills learned at a recent NOW convention to turn the unruilies into stone.

METHOD 4: If the yappers are behind you, dangle a coin from a string over your shoulder. After hypnotizing the students, tell them, "You are a three-toed sloth, you are a three-toed sloth."

METHOD 5: Tap them on the shoulder, and when they turn around, put a gun on the desktop. After clicking a shell into the chamber, say, "Get the picture, pal?"

METHOD 6: Lock the room thermostat to a stifling 100 plus degrees, forcing the hyper students into a fitful slumber.

METHOD 7: Use bubble gum and an accurate throwing arm to seal the mouths of the disruptive students.

METHOD 8: When the talkative student asks for a piece of gum, as they always do, give him a piece of Ny-Quil-Gum.

METHOD 9: Using the ancient techniques of acupuncture, stick a pin into the back of the body that relaxes the mouth.

METHOD 10: Wear a special sweater to class with the subliminal message "Shut your freaking mouth" knitted into the winter pattern.

These techniques are sure to quiet the loud and obnoxious students who interrupt your concentration in class. There is one problem: after hushing the students, they have already missed half of the lecture.

Hurricane drains Red Cross funds

By RHONDA RIDGEWAY
Staff Writer

Three weeks after the danger has passed, Hurricane Hugo is still alive in the minds of Americans everywhere. One of the most devastating hurricanes on record, the damage is still being reported daily. There are many relief programs being developed to meet the needs wrought by Hugo. The American Red Cross is sponsoring one of the largest of these.

Estimated at $42 million, its program will run the Red Cross' relief fund into a deficit. In addition to this, $10 million is needed to pay for other possible disasters in the remaining nine months of the fiscal year.

"I can state flat out that by meeting the current commitments, our entire relief fund will be in substantial debt," said George F. Moody, chairman of the American Red Cross, "And as the single non-government relief agency chartered by Congress to provide disaster assistance to all Americans,' the Red Cross relies solely on the generosity of the American people at times like this. We are confident that Americans will once again come to the aid of those suffering from Hurricane Hugo's destruction."

After circersing through the Caribbean and Puerto Rico, the hurricane turned its 140 mph winds on the American mainland and left a trail of destruction throughout the Carolinas. Hugo also split off into many tornadoes in the Carolinas region, bringing even more devastation to that part of the country.

As of Friday, Sept. 22, there were eight reported hurricane-related fatalities in South Carolina. Red Cross officials confirmed heavy damage to Charleston and Herebert, S.C. About 50,000 people in the Carolinas had been evacuated to 226 Red Cross shelters. Forty Red Cross emergency response vehicles were dispatched from the Red Cross hurricane watch centers in Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, and Conway, S.C., and Wilmington, N.C., and remained on alert through the weekend. Allen-Wells volunteers John Thelen and Monday Smith are currently in this area.

"In the tradition of neighbor helping neighbor, we urge Americans to support the Red Cross by donating whatever they can afford to the disaster relief fund," said Moody.

To support the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund, send checks to the Allen-Wells Chapter, American Red Cross, 3312 East California Road, Fort Wayne, Indiana 46825. Checks should be made out to American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund. For more information, call toll free 1-800-453-9000.

On Nov. 13-29, there will be a faculty art show sponsored by the Art Students League and the fine arts department. The show will feature the work of ten visiting assistant professors. Kimberly Vito, who teaches beginning drawing and printmaking, will show a variety of prints. John Hirshon, an instructor of drawing and design, will exhibit several of his paintings and drawings.

The show will take place in Building A of the fine arts auditorium at 1023 West Berry Street, Monday through Friday from noon to 1 p.m., and Friday, 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Admission is free.

Another upcoming event sponsored by the A.S.L. and the fine arts department is the annual Holiday Arts Auction. This event will be held Saturday, Dec. 9, beginning at 10 a.m. It will also be held in Building A at the auditorium. Previewing of the artwork starts at 9 a.m.

The artwork that will be auctioned consists of paintings, prints and drawings created by students and faculty of the fine arts department. According to senior art student Valerie Miller, "It's a good chance to see what kind of artwork the students and faculty do."

Part of the money received from the sale of the artwork will go toward the Fine Arts Scholarship Fund. Admission for the auction is free, however donations will be accepted. Refreshments will be served at this event by the art students.

Stewart writes charming poems

By KIM SARBER
Staff Writer

"Jimmy Stewart and His Poems"
Jimmy Stewart
Crown, 32 pages, $8.95

If you are a fan of Jimmy Stewart, then you will thoroughly enjoy his little book of poetry, "Jimmy Stewart and His Poems." This is a small, beautiful book of poetry that is simplistic and charming, of personal and engaging. Stewart includes poems about the family dog, a fishing trip, a video camera and a photo safari in the Aberdares.

Book Review

Stewart wrote these poems in lieu of a personal daily journal. He jokingly implies that he was a failure at writing down his personal thoughts in a journal, as many interesting or unusual events became pocos.

The poetry is not outstanding, but it does have an alluring charm. The poems cannot compare to established poetry. They are childlike, straightforward and easy to read, certainly not full of profound statements, but are unpretentious in the charm of Elwood P. Dowd in "Hervey."

The book's external packaging contributes to its internal charm. The simplistic colors and pictures highlight the poems and add a visual element. It is a beautiful book which could easily be an original gift or conversational piece. The book has essentially two parts, a prose introduction that explains each poem, and the poem itself.

The introductions are interesting and provide into Stewart's life and the motivation behind the poem. Stewart fills in the details of the poems with short histories of the people, and why he wanted to memorialize the events depicted.

"Jimmy Stewart and His Poems" is a wonderful little book that should be taken highly as entertainment and not classical poetry. I highly recommend this book to anyone, especially children, who will be able to hear its whimsical charm.

Volleyball team catches fire

By JASON HERRON
Sports Editor

The IPFW women's volleyball team continued to play well over the weekend, collecting three Great Lakes Valley Conference wins at Bellarmine.

The Lady Dons traveled to Bellarmine for the weekend charter match with Bellarmine, Kentucky State and the University of Indianapolis.

IPFW won all three matches and raised its season record to 16-6 and GLVC record to 6-1.

On Friday, the Lady Dons downed host Bellarmine in four games, 15-6, 15-7, 9-15 and 15-10. Seniors Sheri Hanna and Jami Brown led the way. Brown led the squad with 18 kills while also collecting eight digs. Hanna added 13 kills and led the team with 10 digs.

Saturday saw the Lady Dons start off by whupping Kentucky State 15-5, 15-4 and 15-6. Wendy VanderWalt and Brown led the way with nine kills each.

The Lady Dons only test of the weekend came in Saturday's final match with U. of Indianapolis. IPFW came back after dropping the first game 8-15 and took the next two games 15-9 and 15-3. The Lady Greyhounds won the fourth game 10-15 to set up the fifth and final game, which IPFW won 15-5.

Brown again led the way in kills with 17, while freshman Temple Sweverland was close behind with 14. Sweverland also led the squad with 17 digs in the match.

The three wins gave the Lady Dons a four game winning streak, while they have also won nine of their last 11 matches.

On the weekend, Brown collected 47 kills, while Hanna and Sweverland each added 26. Brown and Sweverland also added 25 digs each. Junior setter Kim Wilder also played well, dishing out 119 assists on the weekend.

IPFW coach Lisa Sheehan said the team played well and she singled out some of the bright spots.

"The weekend went well and there were a couple of extraordinary bright spots," Sheehan said. "Temple Sweverland and Wendy VanderWalt played really well all three matches. Also Sheri Hanna played extremely consistent and helped to hold things together for the team."

St. Joseph's and Northeast Illinois will be at IPFW for a tournament hosted by the Lady Dons. IPFW will meet Northeast Illinois Friday at 7:30 p.m., NE Illinois and St. Joseph's will meet at 11 a.m. Saturday, and IPFW and St. Joseph's will square off at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Sheehan said this weekend should help tune her squad up for the GLVC tournament, which will be held November 17 and 18.

"I feel that this weekend will be a fine-tuning tournament for us, and I think that we're starting to peak at the right time, and we'll be right where we need to be for the GLVC tournament."
